Korcula is well known as the birthplace of Marco Polo and one of Croatia's many treasures, is an exquisite town, which would be a crime not to visit, especially if You are staying in nearby Dubrovnik.

You will drive up the coast from Dubrovnik, following a route that meanders through the vineyards and valleys of the Peljesac Peninsula (which is only joined to the mainland by a thin silver of land) and finishes at the coastal town of Orebic.

The first town on Peljesac that we pass is called Ston. By its economic and strategic significance, Ston was the second most important town, after Dubrovnik, of the Dubrovnik Republic. This is confirmed by the monumental walls, constructed between the 14th and 15th centuries, and extending over 5 kilometres in length and measuring 5-10 metres in height.

After a short stop in Ston, You have a drive of about 45 minutes till You reach the small town of Orebic, from where we will take a boat directly to the island Korcula and its old town with the same name.

Korcula is the island with the most abundant vegetation in the Adriatic, and it's a kind of ecological Eden of the Mediterranean.

The town is one of the best-preserved medieval towns of the Mediterranean and a traditional tourist and cultural centre of the island.

On the island you will have one hour guided tour and about 2 hours free time.

Before we drive back to Dubrovnik, we will make a stop on Peljesac in a private-run vineyard cellar where you will have the possibility to taste some of the best wine sorts of Croatia
